Pope Francis: Oceans are God's gift for all generations

Panama recently hosted the 8th Our Ocean Conference under the theme "Our Ocean, Our Connection" to highlight the importance of knowledge as "the basis of our actions and policies to ensure the protection of our ocean".

The event took place separately but at the same time as national governments held UN-sponsored, breakthrough talks in New York in which they agreed to a new "High Seas Treaty" to codify conservation efforts of ocean areas beyond national jurisdictions.

Pope Francis sent a message to participants in the Our Ocean Conference held in Panama, on 2-3 March, which was released on Monday and signed by Cardinal Secretary of State Pietro Parolin.

Gift from the Creator for all humanity

In his message, the Pope highlighted the importance of "humility, gratitude, and awe" as we say "Our" ocean.

"Starting from contemplation and study, our understanding of the complex and amazing mechanisms and balances of the oceans allows us to appreciate the role they play for everyone, not just coastal communities."

He noted that all people depend on the oceans and are rightly considered the "common heritage" of humanity.

The oceans, he added, were given to us "as a gift from the Creator", and we must therefore work to use them fairly and sustainably in order to pass them on to future generations.

Tied together by a common ocean

Pope Francis urged the politicians and business leaders at the conference to embrace an "integral vision of ecology" in line with his encyclical Laudato si'.

He noted that the oceans face a host of threats, including pollution, acidification, and illegal fishing, as well as the nascent extractive industry on the seabed. The Pope also tied in the many migrant tragedies that occur on the high seas and the harsh treatment of seafarers. In response, he called on governments to recognize the "interconnectedness and interdependence between communities and countries" which the oceans embody.

"We are one family, we share the same inalienable human dignity, and we inhabit a common home that we are called to care for."

Three directions toward hope

The Pope went on to offer three directions to improve humanity's relationship with the oceans. First, he said, we need to listen to the cry of the poor and of the Earth, and therefore "urgently review growth strategies based on waste and unsustainable models of consumption."

Second, humanity needs to united "to protect and restore marine, coastal, and river ecosystems".

Finally, said Pope Francis, governments need to create effective “governance systems” to regulate and coordinate activity on the oceans.

“By working in these directions,” he concluded, “there will always be hope.”

Nations agree to protect the world's oceans after 10 years of negotiations

These negotiations on ‘The High Seas Treaty’ had been stalled for years over differences on funding and fishing rights.

Now, though, after all-night talks in New York, UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres has welcomed the finalization of a text.

The new treaty aims to ensure the conservation and sustainable use of marine biological diversity of areas beyond national jurisdiction.

Covering nearly two-thirds of the ocean, the treaty marks the culmination of nearly two decades of work, and builds on the legacy of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea.

Historic achievement

According to conservationists, the development is a victory for international efforts to counter the destructive trends facing ocean health, now and in the future.

Furthermore, it is considered vital for addressing climate change, biodiversity loss and pollution. It is also important for achieving ocean-related goals and targets of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

The UN Secretary General commended all parties for their ambition, flexibility and perseverance.

His spokesman said he looks forward to continuing working with all parties to secure a healthier, more resilient, and more productive ocean, benefiting current and future generations.
